For two generations, the Fletchers' family has owned and operated the finest mills and manufacturing facilities for crafting wood pepper mills, salt mills, muddlers and rolling pins. Tradition and wisdom passed down from a family of roll-up-your-sleeves American entrepreneurs, the current generation of Fletchers grew up in the company before taking ownership, working in the business from the sawmills through the mechanics to management — knowing the business from top to bottom.

In the modernized sawmill, local maple or cherry logs are processed into boards, squares, and dowels, and then kiln dried. The prepared wood is then turned or molded into one of the thousands of items. Most of the sawdust and scrap wood generated is used to heat their factories and kilns, and the rest sold to local business who manufacture wood pellets used to heat homes. Located in the western mountains of Maine, sourcing wood locally and from Forest Stewardship Council (FSW) certified suppliers, employing around 100 people — Fletcher Mills represents quality, community, sustainability, and craftsmanship.

Fletchers Mills Pepper mills, like all Fletchers' Mills products, come with a lifetime guarantee on the stainless steel two-step mechanism, which first crushes the peppercorns for enhanced flavor, then grinds to the chosen consistency, and features their "Lock&Grind" system for a wide range of grinds and reliably consistent results. All Fletchers' Mill pepper mills feature pop-out mechanisms for easy cleaning.

"From raw logs to the finished product the entire process is done in-house and under a watchful eye. That is why the Fletchers are proud to say Made in Maine, Guaranteed for Life." – Doug Fletcher
